Clot-shots unite!

We'll keep this brief.

The Russian Direct Investment Fund (RDIF), Russian pharmaceutical R-Pharm, and AstraZeneca have jointly announced that combining Sputnik Light with the British-Swedish clot-shot is a totally awesome idea.

RDIF—Russia's sovereign wealth fund—is Sputnik V's main financier. RDIF is also invested in R-Pharm. Coincidentally, R-Pharm manufactures Sputnik V and also AstraZeneca's clot-shot. Everyone is connected, like a happy human centipede.

Study shows safety of combination of AstraZeneca, Sputnik Light jabs, RDIF says

It is reported that the vaccines combination demonstrated an acceptable safety profile, which is consistent with the results of previous AstraZeneca vaccine, Sputnik V and Sputnik Light vaccines clinical trials

Depraved.

This completely impartial trio of clot-shot skills tested their genetic cocktail on 100 volunteers in Russia and 100 volunteers in Azerbaijan. Verdict: safe and effective!

"Preliminary data from the combined use of Sputnik Light and AstraZeneca vaccines confirm the correct use of different vaccines during revaccination. In the context of the emergence of new dangerous strains of coronavirus, it is this approach that can provide safe, effective and long-term protection," gloated Kirill Dmitriev, RDIF's CEO and WEF Young Global Leader Class of 2009.

R-Pharm has agreed with the British AstraZeneca on the production of a vaccine against coronavirus

The Russian pharmaceutical company R-Pharm has agreed with the British AstraZeneca on the production of a vaccine against the coronavirus COVID-19, said Alexey Repik, Chairman of the Board of Directors of R-Pharm.

"We formalized this intention in the form of a signed agreement on the production and supply of the vaccine, which was developed by AstraZeneca and the University of Oxford, using the technological capabilities of R-Pharm to implement the project," Mr. Repik said on the air of the Russia 24 TV channel (quote according to "RIA Novosti"). According to him, the Russian company will become a hub for vaccine supplies to 30-50 third countries, including the countries of Europe and the CIS, Southeast Asia and the Middle East. But the priority in the implementation of the project will be Russia, added a representative of R-Pharm.

HMMMMMMMM.

As we reported last month, the plan has always been to create an AstraZeneca/Sputnik V cocktail for use in Russia. And this new "study"—conducted on Russians—is an important step towards making this degenerate dream a reality.

"But Edward, the Russian government will never allow Big Pharma clot-shots to enter the Russian market!"—please just stop. Seriously.

The head of RDIF announced joint research of Sputnik and Pfizer vaccines in two countries

According to Kirill Dmitriev, the combination of Sputnik with other drugs will be an effective way to cope with coronavirus mutations

Sputnik V developer considers it useful to combine foreign and Russian vaccines

Dmitry Scheblyakov recalled that studies of vaccine combinations, in particular, with AstraZeneca, Sinovac and Pfizer have already been carried out

If anyone is still shilling Sputnik V we urge you to reconsider.

This is sort of like the Battle of Poltava, except this time around Russia and Sweden are friends not foes, and instead of blowing each other up they are working together to inject plebes with unproven genetic cocktails as they pocket enormous amounts of rubles. At least they had cool uniforms back then. This new scam sucks.
